THE PROBLEM CITIZENSHIP RIGHTS ABUSES; SEXUAL VIOLENCE AGAINST CHILDREN

Hundreds of thousands of people from ethnic minority groups (called hill tribes) in Northern Thailand are not recognized as Thai citizens—despite their legal right to citizenship. Many hill tribes have been living along these mountainous regions for generations, long before modern country borders were drawn. Laws exist to incorporate hill tribes as citizens, but the application process is complex and difficult to navigate for people living in poverty. Without citizenship, stateless people are not protected by any law, are often denied access to medical care or education, and they cannot work or travel outside their district. With or without citizenship, children also face a high risk of sexual violence in Thailand.

THE FACTS

There are 10 million stateless people worldwide.¹

An estimated 20% of the world's stateless live in Thailand—about 2.5 million.²

Lack of citizenship is the major risk factor for hill tribe women and girls for being trafficked or otherwise exploited.³

Children from ethnic minorities or migrant populations in Thailand are especially susceptible to human trafficking.⁴

How IJM Chiang Mai Combats Abuse and Advocates for Citizenship

We travel throughout Thailand's remote northern hill tribe region to help stateless hill tribe people apply for the citizenship to which they are legally entitled. We relentlessly advocate on their behalf to move their cases through overburdened government offices that oversee the citizenship application process.

We rescue children out of dangerous situations of sexual violence by working with local authorities. We receive case referrals from partner organizations, churches and families. We ensure that every child is brought to a place of safety.

We bring perpetrators of sexual violence to justice. We investigate cases, help Thai police to arrest criminals and support prosecution of rapists and other child abusers.

We restore survivors by providing trauma therapy and supporting families so children can heal in a safe and stable environment. We help survivors prepare to share the truth in court.

We strengthen justice systems by providing training and hands-on mentoring to government authorities so they can grant hill tribe people citizenship and protect children from abuse. We advocate for reforms to the court process to protect children.
